Course leaders comments

We have many students that are in other programs and may not see the importance with the evaluation, we will discuss this further and see if we can improve the amount of students that answer the evaluation.

I have received personal comments from several students, here are some thoughts:

"Thank you, I enjoyed the course very much, especially the field trip. One small thing that could be improved on are the questions and requirements for the written assignments. Some were formulated a bit poorly or were a little difficult to understand."

"It was a really nice course and was a pleasure meeting you as well. I thought it was a very well thought out course provided me with a chance to learn more about forests in practical. It is a pity that we could not have one week of field work, it would have been even more useful."

"Kursen har varit väldigt bra, och särskilt fält(halv)veckan. Lättare att relatera till skillnader mellan olika behandlingar/försök när man ser dem i fält än när det bara är staplar i en graf."

"Jag var väldigt nöjd med kursen och tyckte framförallt att fältveckan var väldigt givande (även om vi fick den i ett komprimerat format). Uppskattade mixen av doktorander och masterstudenter."

"Jag hade hoppats på att kursen skulle haft ett mer internationellt perspektiv. Framförallt med tanke på att det fanns många kursdeltagare från olika länder som kunde delat med sig om förnyingsfrågor från deras hemländer."

We are thinking of changing the start of the course so that instead of having one webinar at the start we might have lectures once a week for three weeks. Maybe this will give the students a better start.

We will also consider the international perspective

Student representatives comments

My name is Alizée Ville, and I am the student representative for the course "Forest regeneration", given during the summer 2020.

The context

The context of the course was difficult, given Covid-19 conditions. This had major effects on the planned field work, since the planned 5 days ended up being 2 1/2 days. Many students were not able to come during this period. Nonetheless, the course was given with utmost professionalism, and we were still able to do field work, which was probably the best part of the course.

The format

As much of the course was given online, and tasks and assignments were to be done autonomously, this gives students a lot of leverage to plan their work according to their own schedule. As I was working part time during the summer, this was a wonderful set up, and I was able to learn a lot at my own pace. It is unfortunate that so many students dropped the course during the summer, while many students might still have been on waiting list. One thing that might help filter interested students early on, would be to require one small assignment to be given in early in the course.

Assignments

The type of assignment given was great, as it followed a "learning by doing" format. Some students mentioned that the tasks might have been a bit too theoretical, but they were followed by more practical tasks. The assignments forced us to spend a lot of time studying and asking ourselves questions, reading a lot of literature, and synthesizing knowledge. The field work we were required to do also made me go out in the forest, and, in my own time, directly apply the knowledge I had theoretically learned during the course. This combo of theory and practice was perfect, and gave room to a lot of personal ideas, as we were able to select our own field project.

The professors

During the few online meetings, the professors were very helpful and knowledgeable. During the summer, some students had trouble getting answers by email, but overall the teachers were very available to discuss field work and assignments. Most of all, they were very involved and passionate during the field week, which was very important for many students, and for many was the highlight of the course.

Conclusion

Overall, this was the perfect summer course, rich in content yet flexible, and very accessible to outsiders who have little to no knowledge of the field.
