Course leaders comments

We brought in changes to the second running of the course like a clearer schedule with literature and task deadlines together with weekly online Q&A sessions. Also, kind reminders to students improved communication with students. These changes were well received by the students. As suggested by the students, we plan to have the Q&A even later, starting at 17 instead of 16 in order to make more students be able to attend (we had students doing full-time work or studies). We hope this would encourage more students to participate in the Q&A sessions.

There is no urgent need to change the curriculum, but we have to assess the workload for the students and adjust the "burden", by adjusting the number of tasks, and how large the hand-ins are expected to be.

Some students missed out on the core of the topics, especially the 2 reports. Also, despite structured lectures and reading materials, some students had trouble fully understanding the topic, as reflected by their answers in the hand-ins. We suggest that we will try to produce informal pod-casts where teachers discuss topics so students can listen to them during travel or walk in the park. As we don't meet the students at all, only online this could be a way to enhance the understanding of the topic as well as having it in a form that would suit the full-time employee or student.

Precision livestock farming for sustainable production – VT2022 : Course evaluation

This report is based on the Evaluation report (1) and the discussion during the last course with a part of the students and Anders (2).

1. Student report: participation = 33%

Number of answers: 3 students among 9 registered = 33%

Overall impression of the course = 4,7/5

Time spent on the course:

- 2 answers for 6-15h/week
- 1 answer 26-45h/week

The time spent for the course seemed reasonable for the students present during the last course. However, they found that there was a lot of work at the beginning of the course, almost as much as a 100% pace course.

- The physical learning environment (facilities, equipment etc.) has been satisfactory.
- The course has included a gender and equality aspect, regarding content as well as teaching practices.

2. Comments made during the last lecture

The students who expressed themselves are very satisfied with this course!

General comments on the course:

- Students are satisfied with the schedule and the way the modules work and do not want it to change.
- They think that it is very important to keep 1 or 2 Q&A sessions per week.
- The course was well planned and presented to the students at the beginning of the module, which gave them a good overview of the program and helped them organize their work. They were also pleased with the early announcement of deadlines, which allowed them to organize their work on their own.
- Some students noted the large number of papers provided throughout the course, but it was concluded that this was positive for students wanting to go further and that this was not a problem as long as students were not required to read all of these papers.

Ideas for next year:

- One idea put forward by a student was to ask students to send their questions in advance for the Q&A sessions to allow teachers to prepare their answers, so as to devote enough time to important questions, which sometimes lacked time to be answered.
- Some students would like these sessions to be shifted to 5pm to allow those with work constraints to join these sessions.
- Finally, it was discussed with Anders about a podcast format, for example for lectures, or even for assignments where students could discuss more informally, to allow participants to follow the course in transportation etc. Without changing the course materials, which the students are happy with, it might be interesting to add a lecture of this type.

Thank you again for a very nice course! :)
