Course leaders comments

The course had overall very positive feedback, where students highlighted that they achieved a good development of new knowledge that could be applied in their work. They highlighted the perspectives as important and relevant for understanding children and youth perspectives, needs and aspects important for the development of spaces for children and urban spaces. Several students spoke about how useful were the methods they learned and used, and valued the international and interdisciplinary perspectives that were possible in the online setting of the course. Zoom and the digital platform Canvas worked really well. The assignments were equally appreciated as relevant and interesting. Some students named the complexity of the course as challenging. There was also some feedback relating to the navigability of the course, which the course leaders thought about.

Here are some concrete outcomes that the course leaders propose based on the feedback of this year:

- Streamline Canvas page to make it more navigable.
- Make a reference document that guides them through the course – to do lists, a gameboard of a skeleton of references and learning outcomes.
- Could the course perhaps be more hybrid? Ideas: Study visits? Or make the course more interactive? Placebased activities combined with another course??
- Equality and inclusion – more focus?
- Ensure workload is more manageable – not too many small assignments
- Literature seminars as part of the schedule
- Group work issues? How to ensure equal work and contact
- Collaborate with other teachers at SLU?
